My dear Jennie

Your note of the twenty first inst. received this evening. Why, my dear, I thought I told you that I received your pictures - I have received two of yours and one of Sarah's. So, darling, if you "Engage" I'll "Engage" too. Oh! don't love it too bad - come here and try me dear.

I think I receive your letters regularly - one almost every night.

The officers are to complete their arrangements tonight for a grand presentation to me. The address I have seen and it is more severe upon the North End than I would wish. Many John and of course George stand neutral. But the vast majority - in fact 25 of them sign it. The men are indignant also and are contributing for my present.

Tomorrow morning I go on picket as General Officer of the outposts - acting Beigodier again as Col. McE made is again unwell. I will be absent four days, but letters coming to me by mail will be sent out to me. My post will be a little beyond that place that you and I rode to the day it rained upon us. By the way darling I have often thought ^{since} ~~since~~ how cruel I was to urge you to ride faster that day when all the time you were suffering pain. But I did not know it then, and was afraid you'd get wet on the way home. Never mind will have a morning ride in ^{the} future when I will try and be reasonable, if not polite.

There is no move yet and I still inhabit the house - the deserted house.
My little cat even left me. The flag still waves over the bed - but there is no such charm in it as there was. Griffen appears more friendly - he is now in Washington.

Ever fondly
Your Husband
